Welcome to Nielsen’s State of the Media: 2013 Year in Sports Media Report, a compilation of media highlights, advertiser trends and consumer insights across leading sports properties. This year, with the addition of Nielsen Audio and Scarborough to the Nielsen portfolio our “FANALYTICS” platform—what we refer to as the collective intelligence and insights around sports consumers—continues to evolve, helping our clients gain a deeper understanding of the sports fan.

Speaking of fans, their passion for sports, in the U.S. and around the globe, continues to grow. And Nielsen was there every step of the way in 2013 capturing fans’ engagement:

- Nearly 109 million viewers watched the “Harbowl,” the Beyonce halftime show and the blackout.
- Viewers sent 27 million Tweets during the NBA Finals as the Miami Heat repeated as champs.
- The series-clinching game six of the Stanley Cup final was watched by 8.1 million viewers.
- Seventy one percent of UK homes’ TV sets were tuned to the Wimbledon final as Andy Murray become the first male Brit to win the title in 77 years.
- Over 21.6 million German viewers, accounting for 61 percent of German households, watched the UEFA Champions League Final match in May (Bayern Munchen vs. Borussia Dortmund).

I hope you enjoy these highlights from across Nielsen’s wealth of consumer and media insights. This year continued to prove that sports content, across all media platforms, is among the most popular and engaging genres and well positioned to thrive in an increasingly fragmented media marketplace and rapidly evolving multi-screen world.

Sincerely,

STEPHEN MASTER SVP
SPORTS, NIELSEN
HOW WE’RE ENGAGING WITH SPORTS CONTENT ON TV

Viewers’ seemingly insatiable appetite for sports content has led to a proliferation of television options over the past ten years. And although more specialty sports channels have been added to the cable universe, there has also been a trend of non-sports channels adding additional hours of sports programming to their line-ups. Combined, these factors have contributed to an explosive 232 percent increase in available hours of national sports programming over the past ten years.

All of the additional sports content available has led to much greater consumption of sports on television. In 2013, over 33 billion hours of national sports programming was consumed by 255 million people in the U.S., which is up 27 percent from the 26 billion hours consumed in 2003.

Television is not the only medium where sports consumption is on the rise. This year we looked at Americans’ consumption of sports content across other devices during two major sports months, April and September. During both months, Americans spent more time engaging with sports content across each platform compared to the prior year. The average amount of time spent visiting sports sites and accessing sports content on mobile phones in April 2013 increased by double digits compared to 2012, and fans spent about a quarter more time visiting sports sites and watching video on those sites during September.

Interestingly, the one figure that declined from 2012 to 2013 was the unique number of people that actually used their computer to visit a sports site, which can be attributed to the explosion of using mobile devices to access sports content (up 47% in April and up 22% in September).
A MULTICULTURAL LOOK AT SPORTS CONSUMPTION

SPORTS CONTINUES TO DOMINATE TWITTER TV DISCUSSION

In 2013, sports events accounted for only 1.2 percent of all TV programming, yet conversation about sports made up nearly half of all Tweets about TV (49.7%), an increase of 7 percent from 2012. To put this in perspective, TV Series had the second greatest share of Twitter TV activity at 34 percent, however made up about 26.7% of all TV programming.
NFL
NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE

The packaged drama and plotlines of football continue to make the NFL a ratings juggernaut as Americans just can’t seem to get enough football. During 2013, each of the five broadcasters carrying NFL games (NBC, FOX, CBS, ESPN, NFL NETWORK) saw an increase in viewership compared to last season. Peyton Manning’s record-breaking season was a major story this year with the Broncos becoming “America’s Team,” as four of the six highest-rated NBC Sunday Night Football telecasts featured the Broncos.

Locally, the conference champions Broncos and Seahawks also posted strong regular season ratings. In Denver, 40 percent of homes tuned into a Broncos regular season game, up 23 percent over last season, and 34 percent of homes in Seattle watched, an increase of 31 percent from the prior year.

FANTASY FOOTBALL APP USERS KEEP TRACK DAILY

During September, more than 10 million Americans accessed fantasy football apps on their smartphones, up 15 percent from a year ago. Looking at the top fantasy football apps, Yahoo! and ESPN each had five million unique users, respectively, during September. Overall, fantasy football app users spent 2 hours 14 minutes per person, on average, using these smartphone apps during September 2013, and they opened them 27 times per person—that’s almost once a day!

The fast-paced nature, high scoring games and iconic global superstars of the NBA has younger fans continuing to tune in. When looking at the NBA’s regular season viewing audience, NBA marketers have a lot to be bullish about as the viewers are still skewing much younger than other sports. The 34 and under viewers comprise 45 percent of the total audience, for nationally televised regular season games.

In addition to skewing younger, NBA fans are also some of the most social ones, too. Over 7.3 million Tweets were sent by 1.9 million Unique Authors about the June 20th airing on ABC of the final game of the NBA Finals between the Heat and Spurs.

5 OF THE TOP 10 MOST-TWEETED ABOUT SPORTS EVENTS ARE NBA GAMES

Social media has fast become the new “water cooler” for fans to dish about the latest sports topics, prompting teams, leagues, advertisers and brands to take notice of the medium’s powerful connection with sports fans. And in 2013, fans and non-fans alike took to Twitter to dish on NBA games, positioning the league to have five of the ten most-Tweeted games in 2013. Games six and seven of the NBA Finals on ABC between the Miami Heat and San Antonio Spurs drew significant Twitter activity, with viewers sending 7.8 million and 7.4 million Tweets during the game, respectively. Only Super Bowl XLVII drew more Twitter activity among TV viewers in 2013.

The Red Sox’s incredible run to the World Series Championship was the story of the postseason, but the MLB regular season saw an incredible resurgence in the heartland. Towns like Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Kansas City who haven’t had recent success on the diamond each had strong local viewership compared to last season, as the Pirates (+31%), Indians (+45%) and Royals (+71%) all enjoyed a big jump in their local ratings. Detroit and St. Louis have had more consistent success, and led their leagues in local household ratings with the Tigers averaging 9.6 and the Cards 8.7 in 2013.

Nationally, MLB regular season viewers are continuing to get older with the 55+ audience comprising 50 percent of the viewers, versus 41 percent ten seasons ago. As the audience skews older, it’s also gotten wealthier with 21 percent of its viewing audience having household income of $100K+ versus only 13 percent of its audience ten seasons ago.
2013 WORLD SERIES HITS A HOME RUN WITH RADIO LISTENERS

Long considered America’s pastime, baseball and radio seem to go hand-in-hand. MLB games, which typically draw a strong radio audience, saw out-of-the-park gains in male listeners aged 25-54 during the World Series in both the Boston and St. Louis metro areas. When looking at overall World Series radio listeners, St. Louis had a larger share of females who tuned in, while Boston’s listeners were more affluent.

Absence definitely made the heart grow fonder for NHL fans in 2013. Despite a labor dispute that culminated in a lockout and a strike shortened regular season of only 48 games, the NHL regular season average viewership increased by almost 20 percent in 2013 versus the prior season, albeit over a shorter period of time.

Over the past ten years, NHL regular season viewership continues to skew more affluent. Over half (53%) of the NHL’s viewing audience for nationally televised regular season games in 2013 came from households earning over $75K, compared to only 27 percent of its audience ten seasons ago.

One of the most well-known personalities in motorsports, Danica Patrick, has seemingly had an impact on TV viewership since she shifted from the IndyCar series to NASCAR two years ago. Case in point: In 2013, Indianapolis 500 viewership declined 17 percent versus the prior year. On the other hand, the 2013 Daytona 500, where Danica became the first female driver to win a pole and ultimately finished eighth, saw a 22 percent increase in viewing compared to 2012.

Danica’s presence certainly generates buzz among race fans, and the Sprint Cup Series has a long track record of attracting a strong female audience in particular. Over the past ten years, NASCAR’s top series has consistently boasted the highest share of female viewers among any major sports property regularly aired on TV (37%).

GOLF

With golf’s biggest names turning in exciting performances this year, including Tiger Woods winning five tournaments and Phil Mickelson winning the British Open, golf fans had a lot of highlights to watch. The Final Round at the Masters, which is traditionally the most-watched golf event of the year, was one of those highlights, as viewership for Sunday’s round increased 9 percent over 2012.

Although a number of young rising stars such as Rory McIlroy and Jordan Spieth have emerged over the past decade to challenge veteran champions Phil Mickelson and Tiger Woods, the young guns have not swayed golf’s core viewing audience. Television viewership for golf tournaments on the broadcast networks (CBS and NBC) has remained almost the same over the past ten years: White (87%), older (63% aged 55+) and affluent (27% household income over $100K).
AVID GOLF FANS SKEW OLDER, RICHER & TECH SAVVY

The majority of avid golf fans are over the age of 55, but don’t let their age fool you—they’re also highly tech-savy and access sports content on a variety of devices. Perhaps it’s because the first two rounds of most tournaments are typically played during the work day on Thursday and Friday, avid PGA Fans are far more likely to consume sports content on mobile apps (30%), tablets (33%) and while at work (20%) than fans of other sports, and actually less likely to watch on TV.

With the World Cup set to kick off in June 2014 in Brazil, there was a lot of focus and excitement in the soccer world on a number of big World Cup qualifying matches that took place in 2013. In the U.S., the most-watched soccer match of the year was the qualifying match between U.S. and Mexico in March, which drew nearly 7 million viewers across the Spanish and English broadcasts.

Despite the retirement of David Beckham, the MLS still had strong viewership during its playoffs, which were up 9 percent compared to 2012. When looking at the MLS regular season TV audience, the viewership skewed young (40% under 34) and Hispanic (34%).

MLS: MOST LIKELY SMARTPHONE USER

Over the past year, a young, mobile, and tech savvy audience has embraced MLS in the U.S. Consider this: 52 percent of MLS fans who have expressed strong interest in attending live events and viewing games on TV are ages 18-34, the highest percentage of any pro league. Additionally, MLS fans are far more likely to be smartphone owners, with 76 percent of MLS fans owning a smartphone (Android & iOS) compared to 66 percent of the general U.S. population. And 42 percent of MLS fans have viewed mobile video in the past 30 days, compared to 21 percent nationally.

Maybe it’s all those brackets and office pools for March Madness, but the viewing audience for the NCAA Tournament definitely shifts from the NCAA Regular Season. During the regular season in 2012-13, the female audience accounted for less than 29 percent of total viewers, but climbed to 35 percent of the audience for the 2013 Tournament. Additionally, the audience gets more affluent come tournament time, as those with a household income of $100K+ accounted for 23 percent of regular season viewers and 27 percent of the total March Madness audience.

The 2013 tournament also generated a significant amount of Twitter activity with the April 8 airing of Michigan vs. Louisville in the Championship Game on CBS, ranking as the most tweeted about telecast in the month of April.
A CLOSER LOOK AT THE CONFERENCES

The ACC has long been thought of as the dominant and most popular basketball conference in the country, with North Carolina and Duke leading the way. However, throughout the 2012-13 regular season the Big 10’s Indiana, Michigan, Michigan State and Ohio State were consistently near the top of the rankings and as a result led the pack in terms of TV viewership. On average, three million viewers tuned in for the top 10 nationally televised regular season games involving a team from the Big 10 conference.

Between the always-strong SEC, Florida State’s BCS run in the ACC and strong seasons from Michigan State and Ohio State in the Big 10, college football aired a record 31 games nationally in 2013 (not including bowls), compared to only 22 games in 2012, which drew over 5 million viewers, on average.

ESPN’s January 6th telecast of the 2014 Vizio BCS National Championship between Auburn and Florida State had over 25 million viewers and generated substantial Twitter activity (4.4 million Tweets by 1.2 million Unique Authors), surpassing last year’s BCS game by almost 400 thousands Tweets. According to Nielsen SocialGuide, we also know that those Tweets about the game airing were seen by a Twitter TV Unique Audience of 10.4 million people.
A CLOSER LOOK AT THE CONFERENCES

Despite the fact that the SEC’s streak of seven BCS Championships in a row was finally snapped this year in dramatic fashion by Florida State, the conference enjoyed another banner year in terms of having the most viewed college football games of the 2013 season. Between Alabama’s strong season and holding the top spot in the polls until the final week of the season, Auburn and Missouri’s resurgence and “Johnny Football” lighting up the scoreboard for the Aggies, it is easy to see why the storylines in the SEC captured the college football viewership crown again. An astounding 9.7 million viewers, on average, tuned in for the top 10 nationally televised regular season games involving a team from the SEC.

In collaboration with Eurodata, this year we highlight the diversity of sports fans and their passions around the world. In the United States, the NFL and the Super Bowl reign supreme in TV ratings and viewer buzz. But, in other parts of the world and equally celebrated in other cultures are a wide array of sports and sporting events that draw the most viewers.

Soccer (futbol) holds the most sway with viewers across a wide range of markets throughout the world and netted the majority of the hours fans spent watching sports on television. In markets as diverse as Russia, Indonesia, Italy, South Africa and Spain, soccer is by far the most popular sport.

Read as: 23% of total time watching sports on TV in France was dedicated to soccer programs on generalist channels.
Source: Eurodata TV Worldwide
Other countries have a distinct taste for other sports, however. In Denmark, the Handball Men’s Championship on DR1 had nearly 80 percent of televisions in use at the time tuned into the event. In the UK, although a soccer mad country, the most viewed sporting event in 2013 was Andy Murray defeating Novak Djokovic at Wimbledon to become the first British man to win the title since 1936. Here are some other notable sports numbers from around the world:
